On Thursday morning, just as the Coventry. singers were assembling in Robinson's hall for the convention, some one discovered a fire in J. A. Pearson's dentist rooms, in the same block, and H. C. Pierce ran across the street with a pail of water and extinguished the fire almost before any one knew of it. There was a slight commotion with those in the hall, but no scare or stampede for the doors. The fire caught in some unknown manner in the workroom of the dentist, blazed up from near the floor to the top of the window, doing slight damage. It was a fortunate discovery and a providential escape from what might have been a very serious affair to life and property The room adjoined the passage way from the hall, and if the flames had broken into the hall way egress that way would have been cut and the means of escape from the hall only by ladders. territory of the right of suffrage. It is a penliarity of reformers and hobby-riders of all kinds, that they cannot be made to see the remote and general significance of anything bearing upon their particular theories. The woman suffragists cannot understand how the women of Utah should be deprived of the privilege of voting without calling in question the right of all women to the franchise. Senator Edmunds explained this point very clearly in his speech on the Utah bill, but he might as well have left the matter unexplained so far as the woman suffragists are concerned. They seem to be blind to everything but their own assertion of the principle that all women ought to vote, no matter what the consequences, and no matter what the sex in general

on the subject of Mormonism in Utah must be aware that one of the chief bulwarks of the political power of the Mormon hierarchy is the vote of the Mormon women. So slavishly superstitious, so completely under the power of priesthood and of their lords, are the Mormon women, that, no matter what their sufferings and disgrace under the polygamous system they would sooner cut off their right hands than vote against the church. So they help to forge the very chains which bind them. All who have studied the Mormon question proclaim this to be a fact. The intensely religious nature of woman, combined with the ignorance and credulity of the great majority of those who have consented to live in the polygamous state, sufficiently account for what seems, at first sight, quite inexplicable To take from them the franchise.

Anybody who has heard Miss

Field's lecture, or who has read up under such circumstances, is not : denial of the right of women to use the ballot, but of their right to misuse it. The inability, or the unwillingness of the professional women suffragists to recognize this distinction, render their protests ill-timed and foolish. They insist upon retaining the form of woman suffrage where the principle does not in any sense apply.

None but fanatics can question the wisdom of the Senate's action on this bill, and protests against it will certainly do more harm than good to the cause of woman suffrage.-Free
